03. INTRODUCTION

Sri Lanka, though poor, is a country that values education very much and has a very high literacy rate in compared to many other countries in the region. However the educational facilities for the disabled and more specifically for the differently abled are very limited.

Children with disabilities are educated either through inclusion in mainstreamed schools or through specialized schools. The Sri Lankan Ministry of Education initiated special units, which were integrated special education programs within regular government schools, in the late 1960s. However, the Ministry of Social Welfare reports that despite the free educational policy and established special units, there are still students with disabilities who continue to not have access to services. Barriers to accessing special education include a limited number of schools having special education units, administrators denying children with disabilities admission to schools, an insufficient number of qualified teachers, and parents lacking awareness regarding educational facilities there is a general lack of awareness in society that people with disabilities can benefit from schooling and become contributing members of society.

Stigma and negative attitudes associated with the differently abled often make parents even admit they have a differently abled child. In addition two of the major religions in Sri Lanka are Buddhism and Hinduism. Both these religions believe in the concept of karma and the followers tend to think that having a disabled child is a consequence of a past sin and they have to live with it.

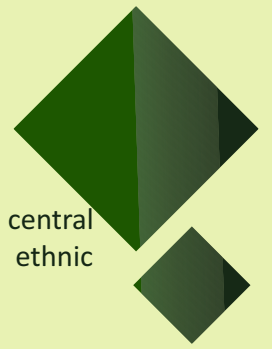

In this context the An-Noor Centre has a great responsibility and a significant role to play in the training and rehabilitation of not only the differently abled individuals but also the parents, relations, care givers, the policy makers and the society as a whole .

04. HISTORY

An-Noor centre (ANC) is a day school and training centre for differently able children and adults situated in Udunuwara area, in the central hill country of Sri Lanka.

Udunuwara area is located in Kandy District, South west of Kandy city with mainly hilly greeneries and paddy fields. Udunuwara has historical cultural values. The last census which was done on 20th March 2012 shows the population of Udunuwara was 110,905.

To cater to the differently abled children and adults living in the Udunuwara area was a long felt need. House to house survey was conducted in a section of udunuwara area in 2017. the survey identified more than 100 individuals in this particular area, most of them are from very poor families and are confined to their homes in a state of neglect. As an outcome of the perseverant effort of local philanthropist and well - wishers, to care and nurture this individuals, the An Noor Centre for differently able was inaugurated as a subsidiary of Udunuwara Development Trust (UDT).

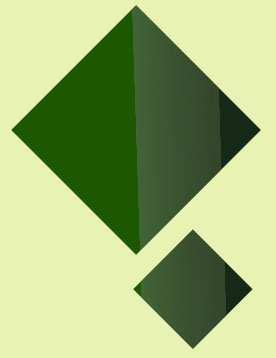

Udunuwara Development Trust (UDT) is a charitable trust. Its aim is to become a central place in Udunuwara in order to promote education, economic development and ethnic harmony.

An Noor centre was declared open on 4th of February, 2018 on the independent day of Sri Lanka. On the inauguration day itself many of the local philanthropists, who were present, committed to meet the running costs of the school. This was very encouraging. Our founder Al.Haj M.H.M.Fahmy has donated a two acre land which is adjoining the UDT premises and plans are being drawn up to construct permanent buildings for the school in the near future. The building complex is estimated to cost approximately 57 million rupees.

First days of school had four (4) teachers and ten (10) students in a temporary shelter provided by Udunuwara Development Trust.
